

Education a top priority for Seagren

Rep. Alice Seagren (IR-Bloomington) isn't a big fan of formal titles.

"I'm really uncomfortable with 'The Honorable,' she said. "I want to be thought of as a public servant. I want people to know I'm down to earth and approachable."

Rep. Alice Seagren

As such, she promises to keep the channels of communication open with those she now represents.

"I like talking with people and listening to their thoughts on issues," she said. "And as they get to know me, they know I'm genuinely interested in their ideas and concerns and will do my best to represent them well."

She describes her suburban constituents as "professional" with a "high level of community involvement." They are "very interested in education."

She could be describing herself.

After spending more than a decade as a school volunteer and IR party activist, Seagren went on to serve a term on the Bloomington School Board before being urged to seek endorsement for the vacant District 41A House seat.

"It was a difficult decision," she said. "I really intended to run for school board again. I liked creating policy which created new educational opportunities for children. But I was frustrated with the numerous state regulations and restrictions districts had to comply with which hindered those efforts."

In the end, she concluded she could do more to advance the cause of education as a House member. She won twice as many votes as her DFL opponent in November's election.

She then sought — and received — appointments to both the House Education Committee and its K-12 Finance Division, where she hopes to make an impact on the state's public school system.

Her formula for improvement?

"Prioritize. Streamline. Provide access. Quit micro-managing, and let local boards make decisions about how to meet needs," she said. Having seen the impact of state regulations on local units of government, she adds the caveat, "No mandates without funding."

Among other important items on her agenda, Seagren lists reducing property taxes, reforming commercial/industrial regulations, and assuring safe communities and good community services.

Seagren said she was surprised to find her new job "so stimulating and invigorating. Before the session started, I'd lie awake wondering how I could balance legislative responsibilities, maintain contact with my constituents and family commitments, but now I find [that] the work's actually energizing."

"Walking into the chamber to take the oath was a humbling experience," Seagren said. "I thought of all the people who have encouraged me and who are counting on me to make good decisions on their behalf. I plan to do my very best to represent them."

What's good for small business is good for McCollum

Last year, Rep. Betty McCollum (DFL-North St. Paul) accomplished a rare feat. She defeated not just one, but two incumbents in order to win a seat in the House of Representatives.

Rep. Betty McCollum

In the DFL primary, she beat six-term state Rep. Rich O'Connor of St. Paul, and in the general election, she defeated one-term IR state Rep. Dennis Newinski of Maplewood.

McCollum said her victories demonstrated that voters are capable of limiting a lawmaker's term at the voting booth when they feel a need for change.

The unusual challenge came McCollum's way because of redistricting. The new district 55B includes all of North St. Paul, part of Maplewood, and the northeast corner of St. Paul. If anyone makes the mistake of saying her district is primarily suburban, McCollum is quick to point out that North St. Paul, where she and her family live, is not a suburb, but a one-hundred-year-old freestanding city.

McCollum, who is 38, is a professional sales management trainer, a licensed social studies teacher, and the married mother of two. She has a bachelor's degree in political science from the College of St. Catherine, and she served six years on the North St. Paul City Council before running for the Legislature.

The district she represents is primarily blue-collar, and its economic strength is small business, with much of that business family-owned, she said.

For blue-collar workers, labor issues such as plant closing notification and vocational retraining are of special concern. Her district's small business owners "want opportunities to invest and expand fairly." When considering new legislation, "what's good for small business is what I have to keep in mind," she said.

When she was out doorknocking in the three communities she now serves, McCollum didn't perceive any tension between suburban vs. city needs. To the contrary, residents of Maplewood and North St. Paul are concerned about the health and vitality of St. Paul and don't want to see an increase in crime or loss of jobs in the inner city, she said.

McCollum has been personally touched by the economic uncertainties that worry many of her constituents. She has worked for the past 12 years at Sears, which recently announced plans to lay off 50,000 workers nationwide. Even a state legislator is not immune to an economic layoff, and McCollum wonders if she'll have a job to go back to at the end of the session.

That worry and frequent contact with her constituents have given her a close-up view of the issues that she must now address as a lawmaker. It is one thing to pore over statistics at your desk, she said, but "you get a different perspective sitting with employees in the breakroom."
