

Proclamation

WHEREAS: Minnesota needs to tap the enormous capacities of its young people for enthusiasm, ideas, and good will while young people today need to be called on to serve in just these ways; and

WHEREAS: In order to meet the needs of our young people and of our state, we need to offer young people opportunities to serve at every age; in school from kindergarten on up to high school; in the larger community, through public and private youth agencies and organizations; in colleges and universities; and in full-time service corps for young adults; and

WHEREAS: Young people in over one hundred and twenty exemplary programs representing over thirty thousand volunteers contributed over two and one half million hours of service to their communities this year; and

WHEREAS: These young people have demonstrated their capacity to learn about their communities and their role as citizens and have made a major positive impact upon the state;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Rudy Perpich, Governor of the State of Minnesota, do hereby proclaim the nineteenth day of May, 1988 to be
