Administrative Subpoenas

An administrative subpoena is an official order compelling an individual to provide a state or local administrative agency with information. This information brief answers common questions about this enforcement tool.

What Is an Administrative Subpoena?

An administrative subpoena generally has the same force as one issued by a court if it is reasonable. Without the power to issue subpoenas, an agency must have an individual's consent in order to obtain information for an administrative investigation or adjudication. Cudahy Packing Co. v. Holland, 315 U.S. 357 (1942).

There are two types of administrative subpoenas. The subpoena ad testificandum orders a witness to appear and give testimony. The subpoena duces tecum requires the production of documents or a showing of cause why they need not be produced.

How Does an Administrative Body Get Subpoena Power?

An administrative agency may obtain subpoena power only by statute. (A table listing the statutes that grant this power in Minnesota through the 2005 first special session appears at the end of this information brief.)

The authority of an agency head to delegate subpoena power may be implied from an agency's duty to promulgate rules and regulations. Fleming v. Mohawk Wrecking & Lumber Co., 331 U.S. 111 (1947). Most Minnesota Statutes expressly allow an agency commissioner or director to delegate the power to issue subpoenas.¹

How Are Administrative Subpoenas Enforced?

While many agencies have the power to issue subpoenas, they usually have no power to enforce them. An agency cannot "under our system of government, and consistently with due process of law, be invested with authority to compel obedience to its orders by a judgment of fine or imprisonment." I.C.C. v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 485 (1894); overruled on other grounds, Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194 (1968). A subpoena is enforced through the courts, but it is constitutional for an agency to impose procedural sanctions if empowered to do so by statute. In Minnesota, the statutes provide for enforcing subpoenas through district court. Agencies are not authorized to impose sanctions.

Generally, a court action for enforcement of a subpoena must be brought by the agency, except when a statute authorizes a private party to bring an action to enforce the subpoena. In the absence of such a statute, an interested private party seeking to enforce a subpoena must petition the agency to act.

¹ See also Minnesota Statutes 2004, section 15.06, subdivision 6, on commissioners' general authority to delegate powers to subordinates.

What is the Penalty for Violating an Administrative Subpoena?

Some statutes granting administration subpoena power indicate that the penalty for disobeying a subpoena is a misdemeanor. Minn. Stat. § 388.23, subd. 5. Others specify that a violation is punishable in the same manner as contempt of the district court. Minn. Stat. § 270.06, cl. 7. If a statute granting subpoena power does not specify a penalty for violation, the general rule is that it is contempt of court to violate a lawful subpoena. Minn. Stat. § 588.01, subd. 3, cl. 8. The maximum penalty for this kind of contempt is a fine up to $50. The statutes specifies that imprisonment or a higher fine could be imposed if the contempt defeated or prejudiced the right or remedy of a party. Minn. Stat. § 588.02.

On What Grounds Can the Enforcement of an Administrative Subpoena Be Challenged?

A party may challenge a subpoena on the following grounds. The burden of proving a challenge to an administrative subpoena rests on the party making the challenge. Tiffany Fine Arts, Inc. v. United States, 469 U.S. 310, 324, n.7 (1985).

Jurisdiction

Generally, the scope of an agency's statutory authority cannot be litigated in a judicial proceeding to enforce an administrative subpoena. Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186 (1946). A court will defer to agencies to determine their own subject matter jurisdiction. When this deference is combined with the low standard of relevance discussed below, it is difficult to challenge the enforcement of a subpoena that calls for information related to an investigation at least nominally connected to an agency's purpose.

Requiring a person not subject to an agency's supervisory jurisdiction to comply with a subpoena issued by that agency does not violate due process. State v. Mees, 235 Minn. 42, 49 N.W.2d 386 (1951).

Reasonableness

A court's review of an administrative subpoena is limited and usually turns on reasonableness. Generally an agency does not need to show probable cause or a pressing need for the information sought in order to have a subpoena enforced. Courts will enforce a subpoena if: (1) the investigation is legitimate, (2) the subpoena is not unnecessarily broad, and (3) the information sought is relevant to the investigation. Oklahoma Press, supra. Courts allow agencies a low threshold to meet these requirements.

The Minnesota Supreme Court set out the following factors in determining reasonableness of an administrative subpoena.

- The breadth and volume of the documents sought
- The source prompting the investigation

- Whether there are other less expensive and burdensome sources available for the information sought
- Whether there is a reasonable expectation that the subpoenaed documents would lead to relevant information. Roberts v. Whitaker, 178 N.W.2d 869 (Minn. 1970).

Constitutionality

There are at least two constitutional grounds for challenging an administrative subpoena.

While probable cause is not necessary for the issuance of an administrative subpoena, the Fourth Amendment's protections against unreasonable searches and seizures apply to requests for information. Marshall v. Barlow's Inc., 436 U.S. 307 (1978). A subpoena meeting the test of reasonableness set forth in Roberts, supra, would not violate the constitutional restriction on search and seizure.

The Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination can be raised to challenge an administrative subpoena. See Couch v. United States, 409 U.S. 322 (1973). This privilege may only be asserted by an individual, not by a corporation.

Fraud, Retaliatory Purpose, and Common Law Privileges

A court may refuse to enforce a subpoena because of fraud or trickery by the government. Similarly, if the government issues a subpoena to harass or to coerce a party concerning a collateral matter, the court will not enforce the subpoena.

Common law privileges that restrict access to information such as attorney-client and the trade secret privilege may also be asserted in contesting a subpoena.
