Community Benefit Provided by Minnesota's Hospitals in 2007

Minnesota Department of Health

April, 2009

Background

The Minnesota Department of Health is required to issue an annual report on community benefit provided by Minnesota hospitals.[1] This report describes community benefit provided in 2007 and includes the following information from each hospital:

- Cost of charity care (also referred to as "community care");
- Underpayment for services provided under state health care programs (the difference between payments for services provided to public program clients and the cost of providing these services);
- Cost of conducting research;
- Cost of providing medical education;
- Community health services cost (examples include community health education, community-based clinical services such as free clinics and screenings, health support services, and self-help programs);
- Financial and in-kind contributions;
- Costs of community building activities (examples include economic development activities, community support system enhancements, environmental improvements, and leadership development training for community members);
- Costs of community benefit operations (the cost associated with dedicated staff, and other costs associated with community benefit strategy and operations); and
- Costs of operating subsidized services (services that operated at a financial loss, such as trauma services, burn units, and neonatal intensive care units).

For purposes of this report, community benefit does not include the cost of bad debt or underpayment for Medicare services. In addition, community benefits reported are net of any offsetting revenues that hospitals received for these activities.

Findings

In 2007, Minnesota hospitals reported approximately $636.7 million in community benefit, which accounted for about 6.0 percent of total hospital operating expenses (see Table 1). As the single largest category, state public program underpayments accounted for about 44 percent of total community benefit, or $278 million (see Figure 1). Charity care and the cost of operating subsidized services each represented about 16 percent of total community benefit, or about $100 million, respectively. The cost of providing medical education amounted to about 14 percent of hospital community benefit, or $86.5 million.

The cost of operating community benefit programs, community building activities and health services accounted for almost 8 percent of total community benefit in 2007, or $48.5 million.

Community Benefit Provided by Minnesota's Hospitals in 2007

Community benefit varies by hospital characteristics, as shown in Table 2. For example, community benefit at Minnesota hospitals as a percentage of operating expenses ranged from 3.4 percent in the South Central Minnesota to 7.2 percent in the Northeast. On average, community benefit at rural hospitals in 2007 accounted for 5.3 percent of operating expenses, compared with 5.8 percent at urban hospitals.

In 2007, community benefit provided by government-owned hospitals accounted, on average, for 8.9 percent of operating expenses, compared with 5.3 percent at Minnesota's private nonprofit hospitals. The two small hospitals in Minnesota that operate as for-profit facilities provided community benefit equal to one-half of one percent of operating expenses in 2007.

Table 3 shows community benefit by hospital. It is important to note that direct comparisons across hospitals should be done with some caution. For example, not all hospitals were able to fully report offsetting revenues for community benefit, and some hospital systems had difficulty allocating their community benefit across individual hospitals.

/1 Charity care charges adjusted to reflect cost of providing care
/2 Calculated as the difference between payments for services provided to public program clients and the cost of providing these services. Where there were no calculated underpayments, this category is zero.
Note: Community benefit costs are net of offsetting revenues received for these activities.
