DWP Fifth and Twelfth Month Outcomes

Introduction

The Diversionary Work Program (DWP) was designed to provide intensive employment services to family cash assistance applicants with the intention of redirecting them into jobs rather than onto the Minnesota Family Investment Program (MFIP). DWP cash assistance and employment services cease after four months. Participants who remain unemployed at that time may then be assessed for MFIP eligibility.

It is expected that, at the end of four months of DWP, fewer cash assistance applicants will become MFIP recipients than would have in the absence of DWP.

For each county, this report indicates the number of DWP cases eligible for DWP for the first time in a given month and the percent of that initial month cohort that were not converted to MFIP by the month following the four month DWP eligibility period (the fifth month) and the percent not on MFIP in the twelfth month.

The graph on the first page and the table on the second and third page following the introduction shows approximately sixty percent of all DWP applicants were not receiving MFIP benefits in the month immediately following their last month of DWP eligibility. Similarly, about sixty-five percent were not on MFIP in the twelfth month after becoming eligible for DWP. The tables on subsequent pages provide monthly data by county.

It is important to recognize that a cash assistance applicant that was not receiving MFIP in the fifth or twelfth month after the first month DWP eligibility was not necessarily diverted into employment by the DWP program.

A pseudo-comparison group study found that, while the fifth-month exit rate jumped from approximately 40 percent to 60 percent after the implementation of DWP, the effect was not lasting. By the twelfth month, DWP applicants were on MFIP in approximately the same proportions as before the implementation of DWP.
