Introduction

The task force on shelter is required to submit two reports to the legislature: one no later than February 1, 2022, and one no later than August 31, 2022. This report will describe the work accomplished to date, and the second report will include recommendations to the legislature.

About the task force

In 2021, the Minnesota legislature authorized a task force on shelter. The legislature charged the group to:

1. Examine existing shelter policies and practices in shelters of all types, including shelter in the seven-county metropolitan area, suburbs, and greater Minnesota, and shelter for single adults, families, and survivors of domestic violence.
2. Engage stakeholders, which include but are not limited to:
 - i. shelter providers
 - ii. people who have experienced homelessness and resided in shelter
 - iii. relevant state and local agencies
 - iv. other persons or organizations with expertise in homelessness
3. Make recommendations to the legislature regarding standards that will strengthen the shelter system and ensure that shelters have the ability and resources to provide safe and appropriate shelter services to those who need them.

The task force consists of twenty-four members, including state, city, and county representatives, public members who have experienced homelessness, advocacy organization representatives, and shelter provider representatives. See Appendix A on page 10 for the full legislation, and Appendix B on page 13 for a list of task force members.

Work to date

The full task force met six times between August 2021 and January 2022. This section describes what the group has accomplished so far.

Developing a group process

The first two task force meetings were dedicated to establishing a group process. The group elected a chair, agreed to a meeting schedule, created ground rules, and discussed how to make final decisions. The task force also created values for how they plan to operate, which are shared below.

Values

1. Liberation: We believe in freedom for people residing in all kinds of shelter and experiencing homelessness outside of shelter. We support the creation of liberating structures and removing barriers that oppress.
2. We will center those closest to the experience in our work, how we listen, and recommendations we put forward. This means listening to people with lived experience and deferring to and giving more weight to people who have historically been disenfranchised. We value a human-centered, not system-centered approach where people are seen holistically.
3. We value and are committed to actionable solutions across the State. We know that homelessness is a statewide issue and that each community has a need to balance the universal rights of people experiencing homelessness with the specific challenges within their community. We will share what we learn, educate, and advocate.
4. Trust: To do our work authentically and create change, we need to build relationships, which require trust. Only then are we able to foster and support transformation.
5. Dignity: Persons who are experiencing homelessness and residing in shelter are entitled to a basic set of rights, dignity, accessibility, and safety as defined by people experiencing homelessness themselves.
6. Responsiveness: We value and are committed to inclusivity, engaging with an open mind, and will strive to understand with empathy.
7. Equity: We will practice cultural responsiveness and humility, acknowledging that homelessness and housing instability disproportionately affect People of African heritage, Black people, Indigenous people, People of Color, LGBTQIA2S+ people, and people with disabilities.
8. Responsibility: We understand the importance of this work and are accountable to people served and our broader communities in the decisions we make, and recommendations we put forward. We are responsible for holding meetings in an accessible way and operating accessibly (physical and sensory accessibility).

Establishing common knowledge

In the fall, the taskforce worked to establish common knowledge around the topic. Members developed a list of questions they would need answers to in order to develop standards and oversight structures, and then they shared their collective knowledge to answer each other's questions. Topics included what shelters look like in Minnesota, how oversight currently works, and what sorts of policies shelters currently have. The next three sections provide an overview of some of the information the group has collected to date.

About shelters

Broadly speaking, shelters are temporary residences for people experiencing homelessness. It is unclear how many shelters operate in Minnesota because they are not all currently licensed facilities, and because there is some gray area in what counts as a shelter. For example, some programs that operate as supportive housing could also be considered shelter programs. The Minnesota Department of Human Services (DHS) provided a list of 172 shelters in the state that staff are aware of, but these are likely not all the shelters that exist.

Shelters can generally be described in three ways:

1. By populations served:
 - a. Families with children
 - b. Childless adults
 - c. Unaccompanied youth
 - d. Survivors of domestic violence (these typically serve both families and individual survivors)
2. By physical setup:
 - a. Self-contained, 24-hour facilities (these typically serve families and domestic violence survivors)
 - b. Overnight-only facilities (these typically serve childless adults)
 - c. Rotating churches (these may be associated with a day center)
 - d. Hotels paid by a government body or nonprofit, including hotel vouchers
3. By funding model:
 - a. Directly operated by a government body
 - b. Nonprofit funded by and contracted with a government body
 - c. Privately operated with no government funding; these are typically church-affiliated

Access to shelter varies widely across the state. Some areas have a coordinated access and prioritization system for shelters; others do not or have no physical shelter provider at all. Outside of the Twin Cities, local government is rarely involved in providing or managing shelter funding and access.

Shelter oversight

Shelters are subject to different oversight requirements and systems depending on their location, their services, and their funding. Oversight may occur at a local, state, and/or federal level.

Some shelters are currently licensed at a state level. They may be licensed by the Minnesota Department of Health (MDH) and/or by DHS. MDH or a local delegated government entity provides board and lodging licenses to some facilities, but those are only facility licenses for health and safety. DHS does require licenses for shelters that provide services to minors and enforces statutory standards for those facilities, their staff, and their services. Adult shelters receiving Housing Support funds are required to have a license or registration.

The state also has some oversight of shelters that receive certain types of funding. For example, shelters receiving grants from the DHS Office of Economic Opportunity must submit written standards that are developed by the provider or local Continuum of Care. These standards include eligibility, intake, length of stay, and discharge/appeals policies. DHS must approve these standards, and enforces them through staff monitoring visits, periodic file reviews, and reporting. Providers who consistently fail to meet the agreed-upon standards are required to develop a quality improvement plan in conjunction with DHS.

In another example of state oversight, shelters receiving standard Housing Support funding typically have a Housing Support agreement, which is signed and managed at the county or tribal level. A Housing Support agreement requires compliance with Minnesota Statute 256I and, by extension, applicable licensing standards for the location/authorization (this often means boarding and lodging license requirements). County and tribal planners are responsible for reviewing policies and managing compliance. Counties and tribes may have separate agreements with providers with additional standards that exceed or are not covered in the Housing Support agreement.

On top of state oversight, shelters may also be subject to some federal requirements. Some standards about accessibility and discrimination—such as the Fair Housing Act, Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, and Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act—should in theory apply to most shelters. Other federal standards depend again on the facility's services and funding.

Cities or counties may add their own requirements to shelter providers in their area. For example, the City of Minneapolis has zoning requirements covering proximity to other shelters, physical characteristics of the building, and an approved management plan. Hennepin County includes performance standards in the contracts of shelter providers that are receiving county funding, which are modeled on the Street Voices of Change Shelter Bill of Rights.

Shelter policies

Shelter policies vary widely. As discussed earlier, some shelters must have certain policies approved by a governmental entity.

Some example topics covered by shelter policies are listed below. This is not an exhaustive list and is only meant to give an idea of what types of policies exist.

- Service animals and pets: What types of animals can residents bring with them?
- Length of stay: How long can a resident stay at a shelter? Can they re-enter a shelter?
- Shelter staff hiring and training: What are the requirements for shelter staff to be hired? What training must they go through after hiring?
- Physical environment: How accessible are facilities to people with disabilities? How can residents store personal belongings?
- Supportive resources: Do residents get a case manager? Do they get support to transition to more permanent housing?

- Financial policies for residents: How much and how do residents pay for their stay, if at all?
- Resident grievances: What happens when a resident has a complaint?
- Separation from shelter: What happens when a resident transitions to another housing situation? Under what situations can a resident be asked to leave the shelter?

State law dictates some of these policies at a high level for shelters serving minors, which are currently licensed by DHS. For example, license holders must document specific information about residents at or after intake, have no eject policies, and follow certain rules about managing residents' property.

Developing the ideal state

The taskforce discussed what the ideal shelter experience should be like for residents. This conversation will inform how they approach developing standards and how they evaluate their eventual recommendations. The conversation centered the point of view of a hypothetical resident. The themes from the conversation are below.

In my ideal shelter experience:

- I am safe throughout my experience.
- I feel:
 - Hopeful
 - Cared for, valued
 - Heard
 - Treated with dignity
 - Like I can be my full self; my experiences and my cultural background and practices will be respected and valued
- I receive holistic services; I get help connecting to other resources/more permanent housing solutions.
- I can fully access services and facilities, regardless of any disabilities I have or languages I speak.
- No wrong door process: I get transitioned to a place that better meets my needs if necessary.
- I have privacy: I have a place for personal belongings, a place that feels more my own.
- My identity is protected in those spaces.
- There is a paperwork trail of my time there: for voting, about discipline, etc.

Creating standards

Members have started drafting standards for the provision for shelter. They are working in small groups between task force meetings to create and revise language. They will continue to provide feedback to each other to refine the standards, and will adjust the language based on stakeholder feedback.

Engaging stakeholders

The task force intends to conduct stakeholder engagement throughout the rest of the group's existence. So far, some members have reached out to shelters to learn about their policies and oversight to help the group come to a common understanding.

As a first phase of engagement, the task force's stakeholder engagement subgroup has planned listening sessions with providers and people who have experienced homelessness. The subgroup is also coordinating with existing, external groups to attend their meetings in January and February 2022. In addition to those approaches, the group has created phone, email, mail, and online form options for stakeholders to share their thoughts. The task force is launching a GovDelivery email list of stakeholders who might like to know about upcoming input opportunities. The task force will revise its approaches as it gains more experience in engaging the public.

Given the disproportionate impact of homelessness on Indigenous persons in Minnesota, and the lack of a seat for tribal governments on the taskforce, members intend to deliberately connect with tribal nations on this issue.

Future work and request for the legislature

The legislation enabling the task force states that the group must submit its final report by August 31, 2022. The group is concerned that it will not be able to accomplish the large task in front of it by this date, and requests a legislative extension to submit its report by December 31, 2022. Members believe the additional time will allow the group to conduct better stakeholder engagement and to discuss how their recommendations may need to be adjusted for geographical regions and different populations.

The task force will continue to meet through August 2022, and beyond if the legislature approves the request for extension. Future work includes further developing standards, conducting more stakeholder engagement, and exploring oversight options. The August report will include the recommendations required by law.
