Welcome

Vision

Demonstrating the power of national service to solve complex social problems.

Mission

ServeMinnesota is a catalyst to address critical needs in Minnesota by working with AmeriCorps and community partners. We share our proven practices nationally.

We get measurable results through:

Innovation

Researching and applying the best data-driven methods to create powerful local solutions.

Investment

Raising and allocating funds for AmeriCorps program development, and people serving in those programs, to maximize return.

Alignment

Aligning with local community and government priorities and setting consistent program standards to ensure measurable results.

Carrying out our Mission

As a catalyst for positive social change, ServeMinnesota is uniquely positioned at the nexus of research and service. We are able to quickly move research to practice by deploying the people power of AmeriCorps to meet critical needs in Minnesota. Each year, we recruit and support more than 2,000 individuals to improve the lives of Minnesotans by offering transformative service opportunities that focus on education, affordable housing, substance use recovery, employment, and the environment. AmeriCorps members serve in 82 of Minnesota's 87 counties.

By leveraging federal dollars, building strong community partnerships, and continually improving programs, ServeMinnesota ensures national service is positioned to make meaningful contributions to our state.

Mentoring Matters

In its second summer, ServeMinnesota's Emergency Response Initiative doubled in size to nearly 600 members across Minnesota.

While the Emergency Response Initiative's work in 2020 focused largely on food and housing, community needs shifted in 2021. Many members served in schools to help students catch up after a year of interrupted instruction.

Anna Lahr served at Second Harvest Heartland in the summer of 2020 and was eager for a new challenge. In 2021, she served in the Robbinsdale school district at the American Indian Freedom School, created to connect students with the past and present of North American Indigenous peoples. The school teaches against westernized narratives and brings Indigenous community leaders into classrooms to share their experiences.

It's a project to which Anna is fully committed. As someone of Chinese descent who was adopted as a young child, she remembers how important it was for her to learn about the history of China and to learn from people of Chinese and Asian descent.

Anna Lahr

“It's about learning what their backgrounds are, listening, and trying to get them the help that they need.”

“If I could have had a mentor before college to help me understand my background, I think I would've loved that,” she said. “I think it's very important for these kids to have that.” Each day, she made a point of checking in with every student: “It's about learning what their backgrounds are, listening, and trying to get them the help that they need.”

Anna's AmeriCorps experiences helped her find her career path. She's currently enrolled in the Master of Social Work program at Minnesota State University, Mankato. ●

Changing the Narrative

As a college student, Johnny Sanasinh loved working as a teaching assistant in physics classes. He realized then that he had a mission: “I wanted to help kids break out of the ‘I'm bad at math’ narratives that had been placed on them.”

After graduating from Saint Olaf College, Johnny found his way to Math Corps, tutoring students in grades 4 through 8 at Spring Grove Public School — and working to change those narratives even earlier. “The 4th graders are just at that cusp where they might be starting to think they're bad at math, but they'll believe you when you say, ‘YOU GOT THIS!’”

Johnny Sanasinh

“Fifth graders have this determination and resolve to get better. The 8th graders have been telling themselves they're bad at math for so long that it's second nature. I focus on trying to change that story and lead them in the right direction.”

With training from Math Corps, Johnny demonstrated multiple strategies and used 3D models to help students visualize math problems. They worked through math problems together until students could confidently use their new skills.

Johnny is grateful for his tutoring experience, which he says has taught him how to model behavior, set boundaries, focus and adapt lessons to meet each student's pace. He'll take these critical skills forward as he works toward licensure to teach high school physics. ●

Inspiring a New Way to Help

Grace Elmudesi graduated from college into a pandemic. “It was frustrating to sit there and want to help and not know how,” she remembers. When she heard about ServeMinnesota’s Emergency Response Initiative, “I thought, ‘this is how I get to do something about what’s going on.’”

Grace Elmudesi

Grace served at a hotel in downtown Minneapolis, one of many sites that offered temporary housing during the pandemic. At the time, nearly 8,000 people in Minnesota were experiencing homelessness, while many others worried about losing their homes.

Sometimes, Grace focused on COVID-19 safety protocols – keeping people six feet apart, with masks on and hands clean. More often, she was there to offer a friendly face and a little human interaction: playing a game of cribbage, helping someone find clothes and toiletries, organizing a trivia or movie night.

“The most important thing was just supporting people and letting those relationships develop naturally,” said Grace. “The connections I made with people were really, really meaningful to me.”

As Grace learned more about the resources available to residents at the hotel, she was able to provide more concrete help. For example, she helped one resident get a needed medical device.

When other residents asked for help with housing or employment resources, she connected them with the right social worker or contact person.

Grace was one of many Emergency Response Initiative members who saw an urgent need among unhoused people for referral to resources. After hearing similar stories from a number of members and site managers, the ServeMinnesota team determined that the need was great enough to inspire a new program: Heading Home Corps.

Heading Home Corps launched in 2021, placing housing resource navigators in nonprofits across the state. Navigators help people identify housing programs for which they can qualify, and provide the resources and support they need to secure safe, stable housing.

After her service ended, Grace continued to work with unhoused people as a shelter wellness assistant with Ramsey County’s Emergency Homeless Assistance program. She’s glad to have served with the Emergency Response Initiative, an experience she characterizes as “so out of my comfort zone.” But, she says, “after I did it, I had no regrets.” ●

During the summer of 2021, nearly 8,000 Minnesotans were experiencing homelessness

AmeriCorps Pledge

I will get things done for America – to make our people safer, smarter, and healthier.

I will bring Americans together to strengthen our communities.

Faced with apathy, I will take action.

Faced with conflict,
I will seek common ground.

Faced with adversity, I will persevere.

I will carry this commitment with me this year and beyond.

I am an AmeriCorps member,
and I will get things done.
