It's a fact!

Since 1926, many American communities have recognized February as Black History Month. They've set aside one week in that month to pay tribute to black heritage and leaders such as Martin Luther King, Jr., the civil rights leader, Benjamin Banneker, who built the first clock in America, and Charles R. Drew, originator of the blood bank and first director of the American Red Cross Blood Bank.

In 1969, Minnesota Gov. Harold LeVander declared Feb. 8-14, 1970 Negro History Week (now Black History Week). One purpose of the week was "to help foster a better understanding between people and to encourage a keener appreciation of the heritage of all American citizens."

On Jan. 20, senior citizens from around the state participated in "Senior Citizens' Day on the Hill." They gathered in the Capitol Rotunda for an "Independence and Dignity" rally where they showed legislators their support for proposed legislation on living wills and transportation issues.

Highlights

Child care credit

The Taxes Committee considered a bill Feb. 2 that would adjust the child care credit on individual income taxes. HF94 would expand child care credit to include individuals who currently don't qualify for the credit because their incomes are too high. The bill would increase the maximum income level to qualify for the child care credit from $12,200 to $15,600 to stay in step with inflation rates.

According to author Rep. Peter McLaughlin (DFL-Mpls), the law used to serve middle class families where both parents worked and placed their children in child care. But inflation made middle class families ineligible for the credit. McLaughlin says his bill would restore child care benefits to families with a combined income up to $30,000. Currently, couples with a combined income of $24,000 lose the credit.

The Department of Revenue says if this bill becomes law, it will have no significant impact on the state general fund during the next two bienniums.

Pipeline safety office

Minnesota's Office of Pipeline Safety plans to take over inspection authority for all pipeline systems in the state by June 1991.

William Barbeau, pipeline safety director, told the Commerce Committee Feb. 2 that the agency now oversees intrastate natural gas, hazardous liquid, and liquified natural gas lines.

Barbeau says his office wants interstate agent status so it can inspect and monitor all pipeline systems in Minnesota, not just state-based systems. The federal government told the office it needed jurisdiction over all pipelines on an intrastate level — such as propane, hazardous liquids, and liquified natural gas — to achieve interstate status. Barbeau says propane line inspections will start in July.

Barbeau told legislators that the office upgraded its inspectors' qualifications and started a comprehensive inspection program.

The Legislature created the office about 18 months ago in response to a fatal gas line explosion in Mounds View. Before the Pipeline Safety Act of 1987, Barbeau says, the state fire marshal's office handled only natural gas line inspections.

Elections

Secretary of State Joan Growe gave an update on elections activities in her office to the Elections Division of the General Legislation, Veterans Affairs and Gaming Committee Feb. 2.

The statewide voter registration system is underway, and Growe hopes to have it completed by year end. More than 219,000 people registered to vote last year, with forms provided at driver's license offices, supplied in tax booklets, and from state agencies. The system paid off in the last general election, she says, when 67.2 percent of eligible Minnesotans voted, compared to 48.9 percent nationally.

Growe talked about two studies her office conducted. The first shows that a special election law the Legislature passed last year led to increased voter participation in special elections where two or more questions appear on mail-in ballots.

The second study deals with voter "falloff," a comparison of the total number of votes cast for an office with the total number of people voting in the election. To deal with this problem, Growe's office recommends: reviewing the current ballot page format; improving instructions provided in the ballot booklet, the voting booth, and the verbal instructions election judges provide; and adding graphics to the ballot pages.

Minnesota thrifts

Minnesota savings and loans are healthy, despite the recent rash of thrift failures in Texas and the federal government's recommendation to take control of 350 insolvent thrifts across the nation. John Corbid, a former Minnesota representative and public affairs director for the Savings League, reviewed the savings and loan industry at a Financial Institutions and Housing Committee meeting Feb. 1.

Corbid says that Minnesota's thrifts are profitable. Nationally, only 24 of the approximately 2,600 institutions claimed insolvency and needed a bail-out in 1987. Those failing thrifts represented more than half the industry's annual losses. Healthy savings institutions bailed out the ailing thrifts with no cost to taxpayers, according to Corbid. And, he says, a special assessment on insurance coverage to bail-out troubled thrifts kept 69 national savings and loans from showing a profit.

Thrifts, a primary supplier of home mortgages, made more than half of all home loans in 1987. Minnesota has 227 thrifts.

Teachers' salaries

A study the legislative audit staff presented to the Education Committee's Education Finance Division Feb. 1 found that while significant cost of living differences exist between the outstate and Twin Cities metro area, teachers' salary schedules compensate for it.

The cost of living in outstate areas is about 11 percent lower than in the Twin Cities metro area, according to the study, with the biggest difference in shelter costs. Shelter costs, which include home prices, rents, property taxes, and homeowner's insurance, are 40 percent lower outstate than in the metro area, while other costs remain similar.

Outstate teacher salaries are lower than those of metro teachers because metro teachers tend to have more years of teaching experience and higher levels of postgraduate training. And their schedules are generally 9 percent higher overall. The study also found that real salaries are 1 to 2 percent higher outstate due to the cost of living differences.

The report doesn't recommend changes in the education finance formula because the cost of living is only one of the factors affecting the cost of education. It concludes that legislators should consider other education costs, along with cost of living differences, before changes in education funding take place.

Health care coalition

Access to health insurance is a problem in northeastern Minnesota, says Nancy Gruver, director of the Health Insurance Coalition. A group of small business owners, consumers, health care providers and local government people formed the coalition in 1987 to solve the lack-of-health-insurance problem.

"Our health care delivery system is very complicated...partially private, partially regulated, partially public. It's incredibly complicated," Gruver told the Health and Human Services Committee Jan. 31. The coalition decided that all groups concerned with lack-of-healthcare issues would have to compromise to solve the complicated problem.

Last year, they mailed a survey to some 4,500 businesses in nine northeastern Minnesota counties, Gruver reports. Ten percent responded. Of those, 37 percent didn't offer health insurance to their employees.

Ground water dependency

Minnesotans depend a lot on ground water, says Martha Brand of the Environmental Quality Board. Three out of four people get their drinking water from the ground. Some rely on private wells that don't have any treatment facility. And ground water supplies about 60 to 80 percent of the water farmers use for irrigation.

Despite this dependence, Brand reports that Minnesotans have very little information about the ground water. We know little about the aquifers (underground lakes), she says, or the general quality of ground water. Brand told legislators she's concerned about how ground water pollutants are transported and how they break down over time.

Minnesotans are especially ignorant of actions that contaminate ground water, Brand says. For example, some people don't clean up their septic systems; others are unconcerned about the effects of lawn chemicals on ground water. Citizens need to know how to properly dispose of household hazardous waste, she says.

Brand, and other witnesses at a Jan. 31 hearing, urged members of the Environment and Natural Resources Committee to support legislation on ground water protection.

STARS

Department of Administration officials unveiled a proposal for a statewide telecommunications network at the Economic Development Committee's International Trade and Technology Division Jan. 31.

The Statewide Telecommunications Access and Routing System (STARS) would provide voice, data, and video transmissions for educational and governmental services, says Judy Pinke, assistant commissioner of administration. Pinke told lawmakers that the department wants to implement a STARS plan in the spring of 1990.

The department advocates a public/private partnership for STARS. The proposal suggests the state manage STARS, but calls for private ownership, construction, and maintenance.

Some lawmakers showed interest in the proposal, but expressed concern about the STARS budget. The department wants the Legislature to allocate $4 million for STARS in the next two years.

Community development

Legislators took time at a Jan. 31 committee hearing to set some guidelines for their work this session. Rep. Karen Clark (DFL-Mpls) chairs the Economic Development Committee's Community Stabilization and Development Division. She gave each member "a chance to dream and share visions" about community development.

Committee members talked about rural and urban community issues. Urban representatives say they're concerned about stabilizing culturally and racially diverse communities. Reducing crime, empowering neighborhood initiatives, and revitalizing projects are other concerns.

Stabilizing the population in their districts topped rural legislators' concerns. They're interested in creating jobs and developing the economy to stop flight to the cities.

The committee developed several guiding principles, including: allowing community stabilization and development to occur from within; providing residents with leadership development, personal stakes, and access to information; and having them invest their own time and energy in developing their communities.

Plastic recycling

Minnesota businesses are collecting, processing, and selling recycled plastic. That's the news legislators heard at a joint meeting of the House and Senate Environment and Natural Resources committees Jan. 31.

Katie Boone, Reuter, Inc. of Hopkins, says her company is currently collecting and processing recyclable plastic from around the state, and selling it locally and internationally to China and Canada.

Biodegradable plastics are making their way into the market. But according to recycling industry representatives, biodegradables break down and contaminate the plastic supply, threatening the recycling industry. Plastic collection in rural areas is often expensive and difficult, they say, but they're working to organize collection efforts.

Recycled plastic goes into many things, including fence posts and chairs, according to University of Toledo professor Bob Bennett. The industry is replacing many paper food containers with plastic containers, which increases the supply of used plastic on the market. Bennett says other reasons to use recycled plastic rather than materials such as aluminum and wood include lower production costs and the ability to resist corrosion.

U of M physical plant

Objective, statistical measures can help determine whether the University of Minnesota's (U of M) physical plant operation passes muster, says Legislative Auditor James Nobles. But, he notes, subjective views will keep alive doubts about how the physical plant runs.

Nobles discussed the U of M's physical plant operation during a Jan. 31 joint meeting of the education finance divisions of the House Appropriations and Senate Finance committees. His report outlines problems in the physical plant operation's procedures such as accounting, inventory, transportation and communication.

"The thing that's really most troubling is the conflict between physical plant management and the board of regents," the auditor says, adding that some regents say they don't trust the operation's management.

Nobles suggests that the physical plant operations' management needs to cultivate trust if the operation's image is to improve. But the physical plant's current officials shouldn't be blamed for problems that have developed over many years, he says.

The auditor's staff plans to re-evaluate the physical plant operation to check on improvements.

Farm loans

The U.S. Farmers Home Administration (FHA) notified more than 3,600 farmers of their loan delinquencies last November, Director Russ Bjorhus told the Agriculture Committee Jan. 30. FHA also offered to restructure the loans; 64 percent of the farmers accepted.

Bjorhus says the FHA wants farmers to attend agriculture classes for training in farm management and bookkeeping. Such training is essential for successful future farmers, he says.

Bjorhus also discussed the Emergency

Loan Program that provides low interest loans to farmers who lost more than 30 percent of their crops during the drought. In a survey last fall, the FHA predicted 5,000 to 6,000 loan applicants, but now expects only half that number to apply. Bjorhus says many farmers don't want to add to their farm debt; others feel they won't qualify because of their income.

Interest rates range from 9.5 percent for operating loans to 6.5 percent for limited resource loans to 4.5 percent for drought emergency loans.

Educational requirements

Minnesota has lots of rules about schools and school time, says James Sauter, assistant commissioner of Education, but few on what students should learn.

"We have no clear, concise definition about what students should be learning," Sauter told the Education Committee Jan. 30. He presented a departmental proposal to outline what the state wants students to know before they graduate. Local districts would develop programs for students to meet the objectives.

"The decisions that are the best in terms of getting the job done are usually those that are made closest to the point of action," Sauter says. "...we want teachers and parents who are involved in...the action of the school."

Schools need at least 30 teachers, and the support within the building and from the district superintendent to make headway under the proposal, Sauter says. And, he adds, changes in the schools would take at least five years.

Buses: food and drink

A woman who had a seizure on an MTC bus during last summer's heat wave gained the Judiciary Committee's attention Jan. 30. Lawmakers criticized a bus driver who wouldn't let the woman carry a beverage on the bus. Due to lack of fluids, she had a seizure.

Currently, bus drivers decide whether to allow beverages on their buses. Rep. Kathleen Vellenga (DFL-St. Paul) says the Metropolitan Transit Commission (MTC) does a good job, but incidents like this erode public trust in the bus service. She says, "it's a sad commentary on the judgment of people and also on the transit system that this situation was not taken care of administratively."

HF122 (Beard, DFL-Cottage Grove) would allow people to consume food or beverages on a bus if they need to for medical reasons, such as diabetes. The committee gave the bill unanimous preliminary approval.

Facsimile machine

Do you have a letter you'd like your legislator to read—pronto? Is the postal service and air express too slow for your late-breaking news?

A facsimile machine, now up and running in Room 198 of the State Office Building, can help you write to your legislator. Also, if you would like to obtain publications from the House Information Office, just send a request and the office will mail you the materials.

So if you have a fax at your fingertips, remember to address your fax cover sheet as you would an envelope, with your legislator's name and room number. Include your return address.

The facsimile number is:

Nothing is more sacred to Minnesotans than parks (Okay, maybe the Twins). More than 13 million people visited parks in the metropolitan region last year, with St. Paul's Como Park seeing the most activity, according to Larry Kitto, Metro Parks and Open Space Agency. Kitto spoke to the Local Government and Metropolitan Affairs Committee Feb. 2. The agency hopes to get funds for other projects, including completion of a park on Lake Minnetonka, development of a park in Big Marine at Lake Waconia, and continued development of Como Park and Minnehaha Park in Minneapolis.

Funding for environmental and water protection comes from many sources, including governmental appropriations, contributions, and fees. The Governor's Select Committee on Recycling and the Environment (SCORE) proposes a new source of funds — a surtax on recycling household hazardous waste, and possibly a fee on hauling services for the curb-side recycling projects. "The more you reduce or recycle, the lower the fee," according to the SCORE report.

Children isolated in adult prisons commit suicide five times more often than juveniles in the general population, according to the Minnesota Juvenile Justice Advisory Committee. Nationally, many states have limited the amount of time they may hold juveniles in adult jails to six hours in metro areas and 24 hours outside metro areas. The Judiciary Committee's Criminal Justice Division discussed similar limitations Feb. 1.

Strengthening financial relationships between bankers and socially or economically disadvantaged business is the thrust of HF42 (McLaughlin, DFL-Mpls). The bill would permit certain public agencies and private foundations to contribute money to a guarantee fund to supply short-term, working capital loans for some small and new businesses. The Governmental Operations Committee unanimously approved the bill Feb. 2 and rereferred it to the Local Government and Metropolitan Affairs Committee.

Minnesota law denies scheduled pay increases to some state department managers, says Nina Rothchild, commissioner, Department of Employee Relations (DOER). Current law prohibits a department manager from making more than the department's commissioner, she says, sometimes blocking pay increases for managers they would otherwise receive. DOER isn't recommending any change to the law this year, Rothchild reports, but may do so within the next two years. The commissioner testified at an Appropriations State Departments Division meeting Jan. 31.

Academics are important, but so are co-curricular and extracurricular activities, students from Twin Cities area schools told the Education Committee Jan. 30. Several students attended the committee hearing to receive a governor's proclamation declaring the week of Jan. 30-Feb. 3 as Minnesota Co-Curricular Activities Week. Committee Chair Rep. Bob McEachern (DFL-Maple Lake) presented the proclamation to a student.

Officials of the Greater Minnesota Corporation (GMC) reported on their activities in Greater Minnesota to a joint legislative hearing Feb. 2. The Legislature established the GMC in 1987 to encourage economic development activity in rural areas.

The missing lynx

Curious and curiouiser, as Alice in Wonderland would say. Transportation Committee members gave Rep. Doug Carlson (IR-Sandstone) a Cheshire cat during a Feb. 1 meeting to celebrate his return after successfully undergoing neck surgery last weekend. Carlson, a big game hunter, recently fell victim to the theft of a full-sized, mounted lynx from his statehouse office. Committee members hope the stuffed cat will help replace the missing lynx.

Rep. Henry Kalis (DFL-Walters), committee chair, read this poem:

It's awful when you're feeling ill,
It's bad to lose your Lynx.
It's clear that in the case of Doug,
Being here must be a jinx.

It's good to see Doug's well again,
It's good to see him here.
But something still is lacking,
He's been through a lot, I fear.

And though you're looking healthy,
We can't find your Lynx just yet.
But 'til we do, we've gotten you
Another little Pet.

GENERAL ORDERS

Bills on General Orders may be considered by the House acting as one large committee known as "the Committee of the Whole." Each bill on General Orders has had two readings and has been reported out of one or more standing committees. Each bill has been printed and has been placed on the members' desks for at least one day. Pursuant to the Rules of the House, amendments may be offered by members to bills on General Orders.**

Do you know

In the 1960s, we knew black leaders like Rosa Parks, the Alabama woman who refused to give up her bus seat during the civil rights movement, and Martin Luther King, Jr. and Jesse Jackson, both civil rights activists. But before and after that era, Minnesota had blacks in leadership roles.

In 1898, John Francis Wheaton, a Republican, was the first black elected to the Minnesota Legislature. Fewer than 100 blacks lived in the district that sent him to the Capitol. Before his election, Wheaton served as a legislative clerk and deputy clerk of Municipal Court in Minneapolis.

Since Wheaton, only four blacks have served in the Minnesota Legislature. Sen. B. Robert Lewis and Rep. Ray Pleasant, were the first to serve in this century. Reps. Randolph Staten and Richard Jefferson followed. Jefferson currently represents District 57B, Minneapolis.
