Budget deficiencies

Five state departments presented budget deficiency requests to the State Departments Division of Appropriations on Feb. 15. Deficiency requests for all state departments amount to $6.8 million, with all but $600,000 coming from the general fund.

Department representatives say the deficiencies occur for a number of reasons. Some departments take on activities for which they do not budget; others have cost overruns and unanticipated maintenance costs.

For example, the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) Parks and Recreation Division says their deficiency comes from firefighting and relief programs associated with last summer’s drought, and from increased attendance at state parks. The Legislature allocates division funds from a dedicated fund, while the fees generated from attendance go into the state general fund. The division wants the Legislature to use extra fee money to clear its deficiency.

Chair Rep. Phyllis Kahn (DFL-Mpls) says this type of deficiency is cost-effective because it reallocates funds the activity creates.

The Attorney General’s Office says deficiencies in that office result from the state’s involvement in major new litigation. His office sometimes contracts with local or specialty attorneys to provide the needed expertise for a case.

Year of the City

Testimony for the governor’s Year of the City program attracted more than 200 people Feb. 14 to the Economic Development Committee’s Community Stabilization and Development Division hearing room.

Fifteen witnesses from Twin Cities and Duluth neighborhoods talked about the conditions of inner city communities. They addressed issues from childhood health and education to crime and drugs. Speakers described inner city neighborhoods as culturally and economically diverse. High rents cause many residents to move often. These issues affect urban communities’ economic development.

Most witnesses say they’re concerned about rehabilitating houses, urban economic development, and encouraging pride and ownership in communities. Many offer solutions for improving urban neighborhoods, focusing on community networks and communications.

The agenda for the Year of the City hearing included guided tours through St. Paul and Minneapolis neighborhoods for senators and representatives.

Editor’s Note: The Minnesota House of Representatives Public Information Office hosted “Media Day on the Hill” on Feb. 16. For this reason, this issue of Session Weekly covers House activities through Wednesday, Feb. 15. Session Weekly will include the activities of Thursday, Feb. 16 in next week’s issue.

Wild animals

The wild and exotic animal bill went through a transformation Feb. 14 in the Environment and Natural Resources Committee. The committee removed the bill’s original language and amended in new language.

The bill’s purpose remains to protect humans, animals, and the environment from harm or damages that wild or exotic animals may cause.

Opponents criticized the original bill as being too general because all exotic or wild animals would have fallen under its regulation requirements. Some opponents said many exotic and wild animals would never survive a Minnesota winter and would not be a threat to humans, animals, or the environment.

The amended bill would require owners of wild and exotic animals to report them to local authorities. It would exempt llama, American bison, and livestock.

The bill would require public meetings to determine the scope of problem wild animals, and which ones should be regulated. The list would tell local authorities where wild and exotic animals are, in the event of injuries or damages.

Owners who don’t report their wild and exotic animals to authorities would be guilty of a petty misdemeanor under the amended bill.

Author Rep. Joe Quinn (DFL-Coon Rapids) says pet store owners and breeders probably wouldn’t be regulated, since they would be regulated under game and fish laws.

Nurses Association

Can nurses provide the same services as primary care physicians? Recent studies say they can, according to Gretchen Musicant, a registered nurse. Nurses can perform 70 to 90 percent of the functions doctors perform, she says, and they’re better able to give preventive care and communicate with patients.

Musicant spoke for the Minnesota Nursing Association (MNA), at a Health and Human Services Committee meeting Feb. 14. She told legislators that the MNA supports Healthspan, a bill that would provide affordable health care coverage for Minnesotans. They like the bill’s emphasis on outpatient and preventive services. Musicant suggests limiting catastrophic costs and placing a priority on preventive and primary care, if legislators need to trim service package costs.

The MNA supports direct reimbursement to nurse practitioners, midwives, and registered nurse anesthetists for medically necessary services, such as prenatal and well-baby care, screenings, and yearly disease checkups. These nurses often charge less than physicians, says Musicant, and studies show that direct billing actually decreases the charges for nursing services.

A bill giving contractors easier access to public jobs gained support in the Local Government and Metropolitan Affairs Committee Feb. 14. Author Rep. Kathleen Blatz (IR-Bloomington) says HF279 would give contractors the opportunity to use irrevocable bank letters of credit instead of performance bonds when bidding for public work.

Blatz says letters of credit help small contractors, who can’t afford bonds, to bid for jobs with their bank’s support. The local unit of government is protected as well, because creditors have an easier time collecting on bank letters. Both letters of credit and performance bonds are subject to identical legal requirements.

The committee recommended the bill to pass.

Law enforcement

Carter says the POST Board has a strong commitment to recruiting women and minorities. Of the 7,000 peace officers in Minnesota, 5 percent are women, and 1 to 2 percent are people of color.

Competition among recruiters for women and minorities is tough, Carter says. There are several theories about why it's difficult to recruit women and minorities into law enforcement careers. Two theories pertinent to Minnesota are that: 1) mentors are lacking in law enforcement for minorities, and 2) recruiters compete with corporations that cultivate minority interest. Corporations offer scholarships, grants, and internships that influence minority graduates to favor corporate rather than law enforcement careers.

Other factors include cultural differences, small population bases, lack of encouragement from career counselors, and the education differences between minorities and whites.

"Recent national research indicates that college is not a deterrent to the recruitment of minorities into law enforcement, and that minorities are better educated than their white counterparts when they are hired by law enforcement agencies," Carter says.

The POST Board is seeking additional appropriations for a staff position to recruit women and minorities into law enforcement.

Workers' compensation

The Workers' Compensation Court of Appeals does the job for which it was created, says Peter Popovich, chief justice of the Minnesota Supreme Court.

"The things that it is attacked for are not based on real fact," Popovich told the Labor-Management Committee Feb. 13. He reported on the Supreme Court's role in workers' compensation disputes.

Changing membership could be a problem with the Workers' Compensation Court of Appeals, according to Popovich. "It is rare that judges get reappointed," he says, adding that judges' longevity could lend continuity to workers' compensation issues.

Popovich reports that the Supreme Court overturned only about 8 percent of the workers' comp appeals in 1988. Of the 850 appeals the Supreme Court considered, 170 were workers' compensation matters.

The state supreme court is a court of last resort for workers' compensation cases, he says. Administrative law judges hear disputes first; if appealed, the Workers' Compensation Court of Appeals hears them. If a dispute isn't resolved there, the high court hears the case.

Brain injuries

Minnesota can expect about 9,000 new cases of brain injured people each year, with over 900 requiring ongoing assistance, according to Eleanor Hands, executive director of the Minnesota Head Injury Association.

Hands told the Health and Human Services Division of Appropriations Feb. 13 that she believes the Legislature's recent failure to pass a mandatory motorcycle helmet law will increase the number of accidents resulting in brain injuries in Minnesota.

She says that nearly two million people in the United States have suffered traumatic brain injury; two-thirds of them are under age 30. Many of these people were articulate and independent before their accidents, and now need help to reach their maximum potential for independence. Independence, Hands says, means employment.

Brain injured people want to work, she says, and the Department of Jobs and Training (DJT) Division of Rehabilitation Services provides the basic service that puts them back to work.

The DJT wants $7 million for the next biennium to expand basic vocational rehabilitation services and client services.

Combined budgets

Legislators talked about combining the budgets for the governor and lieutenant governor at a Feb. 13 meeting of the State Departments Division of the Appropriations Committee.

Lynn Anderson, chief of staff, presented the governor's budget, saying the governor would have no problem if the Legislature combined the two budgets.

Division Chair Rep. Phyllis Kahn (DFL-Mpls) says the idea came up because the lieutenant governor's budget is the only constitutional office for which the governor requested an increase. The $50,000 request would pay for children's initiatives which the lieutenant governor pursues at the governor's direction.

Legislators say a combined budget would help them track programs coming from the governor's office.
Living will

A bill that would allow medical professionals to recognize statements people make regarding medical care they want when and if they become unable to make such decisions gained ground in the Judiciary Committee Feb. 10. Members gave the “living will” measure preliminary approval on a vote of 16 to 9.

Minnesota Concerned Citizens for Life (MCCL), a group that generally opposes living wills, backed an amendment that would have killed the bill, according to author Rep. David Bishop (IR-Rochester). He argued against the amendment, which the committee later defeated on a one vote margin.

Mary Senander, Human Life Alliance, told the committee that the alliance opposes the amendment, and that “all living wills are fundamentally flawed.” However, several Minnesota physicians, medical ethicists, and seniors testified in favor of a living will saying people should have the right to decide what type of medical care they would receive if, for example, they became comatose.

Julie Prigge, a St. Olaf College sophomore, found a bench in the Capitol, kicked off her heels, and wrote a few notes about her visit with legislators. College students from around the state took part in the “Have a Heart for Minnesota’s Future” rally Feb. 14. Students lobbied for continued funding of higher education programs.

Minnesota’s homeless

Minnesota’s homeless include veterans, high school graduates, union members, and adults who have lost their jobs because plants moved or jobs ended. Sue Watlov-Philips, chair of the Minnesota Coalition for the Homeless, presented issues on Minnesota’s homeless population to the Housing Division of the Financial Institutions & Housing Committee Feb. 13.

High housing costs and low incomes mean that people must leave their homes and live in cars, emergency shelters, and transitional facilities, says Watlov-Philips. Contrary to popular belief, she says most homeless people are state residents, not transients, and they hold jobs. Watlov-Philips calls the Minnesota homeless problem a “homegrown issue” and asks legislators to give it immediate attention. The number of individuals using shelters, she says, has more than doubled since 1985, and the number of children has tripled—more than 3,000 people per night use shelters.

Watlov-Philips says “…on any given night, between 31 percent and 38 percent of the sheltered population in the state of Minnesota are children, under the age of 18, typically with their parents.”

Watlov-Philips started Minnesota’s first transitional housing program—a resource program focusing on rebuilding people’s lives rather than giving them short-term overnight shelter. She asked legislators to continue strengthening the program.

Regent nominees

The panel that selected nominees to the University of Minnesota Board of Regents considered the entire board, not just individual regents, legislators learned Feb. 13.

During a joint meeting of House and Senate committees on education and education finance, Mel George, Regent Candidate Advisory Council chair, listed candidates for the board openings. He explained the reasoning behind the advisory council’s selection process. George also outlined responsibilities for the board of regents as a whole and for individual members.

Legislators expressed concern about several areas of the selection process, including questions about affirmative action, political activity, and loyalty to the university. And they were concerned about reports of possible age discrimination regarding the student regent position. While they would use the list of nominees as a guide, lawmakers said they may consider candidates not included in the advisory council’s report. “We will have an open [selection] process in the House,” says Rep. Bob McEachern (DFL-Maple Lake), Education Committee chair.

Lawmakers will consider nominations for the student regent, the Fifth District regent, and two at-large regents.

Electric company

A bill that could set a precedent for the state got a hearing in to the Regulated Industries Committee Feb. 13. Rep. Bob Haukoos (IR-Albert Lea), author of HF374, presented a bill that would establish circumstances under which certain utility customers could be considered located outside municipalities.

In other words, a customer whose property stretches over two power districts may petition for power in one area and then use it anywhere on the property. Such a law would allow Farmstead Foods of Albert Lea to drop its current supplier, Interstate Power Company, and use Freeborn Mower Cooperative, an electric company that offers lower electric rates. Farmstead Foods could cut electric costs and keep the company profitable and competitive in the meat-packing industry, according to Henry Savelkoul, attorney for Farmstead Foods and proponent of Haukoos’ bill.

Opponents of the bill say that if Interstate Power loses Farmstead’s business, it could raise electric rates for consumers. Interstate Power Company, the bill’s major opponent, supports the public policy the Legislature set in 1974 creating service territories to prevent duplication of utility services.
Open enrollment

Open enrollment may be part of the answer to a school district’s ills, but school officials say it’s not the entire solution. Educators told the Education Committee Feb. 10 that they have problems with the open enrollment law. Open enrollment allows students from one district to enroll in a school in another district.

Open enrollment can spur improved academic programs and facilities, educators say. The law also gives students and parents a choice about education.

Schools now may participate voluntarily in open enrollment, although the law becomes mandatory for the 1990-91 school year.

The law isn’t without flaws, school officials say. Students don’t have to commit to attending another school under open enrollment, and that creates staffing and funding problems. Also, students enroll elsewhere because of athletics or other extracurricular activities, not for academic programs as the law intended.

Witnesses told legislators the law is good, but could be tightened. They suggested requiring students to tell why they want to enroll elsewhere and forcing them to commit to their preferred school. Educators also suggested athletics restrictions such as “red shirting,” or sitting out for a specified time.

“Open enrollment may not solve all the problems facing all the Minnesota schools,” says Superintendent Dave Metzen, South St. Paul schools, “but it may be part of the puzzle.”

Notes

Moving more people for less money is the thrust of a resolution on a traffic management demonstration project on the Interstate 35W corridor between Minneapolis, Richfield, Bloomington, and Burnsville. The resolution, authored by Rep. Karen Clark (DFL-Mpls), asks the federal government to authorize and fund a project that would examine alternatives to traditional highway construction projects, such as lane expansion. The corridor has major construction scheduled to begin in the mid-1990s. The resolution is in the Transportation Subcommittee on Surface Transportation.

Minnesota has fallen from a national leading position in the arts. In 1973, Minnesota state government ranked fourth in the nation for supporting the arts. Today, Minnesota ranks 28th. However, the quality of the arts and the arts industry continues to grow in Minnesota in spite of fewer state appropriations. Officials of the Arts Board testified at the Agriculture, Transportation and Semi-State Division of Appropriations Feb. 15, about the need for more state support to expand and foster artistic development in Minnesota.

Does the Department of Finance need an internal auditor? Nellie Johnson, deputy commissioner of finance, answered that question for legislators at a meeting of the Appropriations Committee's State Departments Division Feb. 14, and explained funding increases the department is seeking for the new biennium. An internal auditor wouldn’t duplicate the functions of the state auditor or the legislative auditor, she says. And an internal auditor would be able to give department managers early warning of any problems and provide better service from the department.

Appreciation, attendance, and wagering are on the rise for Canterbury Downs, according to Ralph Strangis, Minnesota Racing Commission chair. He told the Agriculture, Transportation and Semi-State Division of Appropriations Feb. 14, that Canterbury Downs generates jobs and economic development in Minnesota. “My goal is to do everything we can to help Canterbury Downs be successful,” Strangis says.

Rising medical malpractice insurance premiums caught the attention of the Insurance Committee Feb. 15. Commerce Commissioner Michael Hatch issued a detailed report showing that the frequency and severity of malpractice claims have remained about the same over the past six years. Hatch says huge increases in doctors’ insurance premiums seem unjustified. Officials from The St. Paul Companies, the largest carrier of malpractice insurance in the country, dispute the report’s findings, saying the methodology used in the study is flawed. However, Hatch points out that only one of several actuaries who analyzed the report disagrees with the findings.
The judicial branch presented its budget requests for the Minnesota Supreme Court, Court of Appeals, and trial courts to the State Departments Division of Appropriations Feb 10. Sue Dosal, Supreme Court administrator, says the judiciary wants five new staff people and more money when it moves to the new judicial building. They’re also asking for additional funding for two new legal staff positions and for changes in the Trial Court Information System (TCIS).

Students and faculty at William Mitchell College of Law in St. Paul watched Minnesota lawmakers in action Feb. 13. The future lawyers heard the Judiciary Committee discuss crime issues at a special meeting, where students could get a first-hand look at how the laws they study are made, according to committee chair Rep. Randy Kelly (DFL-St. Paul).

Media Day on the Hill

Professional and student communicators from all over the state came to the Capitol Feb. 16 for “Media Day on the Hill.” The program, which the Minnesota House of Representatives Public Information Office sponsored, gave participants an inside look at how a bill becomes a law in Minnesota.

Here, participants questioned House leaders about priorities for this year’s session. The panel, seated at the microphones, included, from the top, Assistant Minority Leader Rep. Steve Svigum (IR-Kenyon); Assistant Minority Leader Rep. Terry Dempsey (IR-New Ulm); Speaker of the House Rep. Bob Vanasek (DFL-New Prague); and Majority Leader Rep. Ann Wynia (DFL-St. Paul).

In a mock committee hearing held in the morning, some newsmen became “legislators,” “lobbyists,” and “citizens” testifying for and against a bill that would establish a lottery. (The bill lost on a 13-13 vote.)

After mingling with House members at lunch, participants went on a Historical Society tour of the Capitol, and then watched legislators debate the “living will” bill on the House floor.

Later, they attended a press conference in the governor’s reception room with Lt. Gov. Marlene Johnson.

Do you know?

The statue of the "Golden Horses" over the main entrance helps to make Minnesota's State Capitol one of the most beautiful in the world. But to the folks in the town of Kenyon, the stately Arabsians, Persians, and Belgian draft horses which adorn the streets during Kenyon's Horse and Cutter Day Parade rank as the most beautiful horses anywhere.

Kenyon, a town of 1,500, except in February when the population triples because of the parade, has held the Horse and Cutter Day event every February since 1979. It's one of Minnesota's largest parades of sleighs and cutters—a small, single horse-drawn sleigh.

Other communities that have scheduled sleigh and cutter parades are Duluth, Ely, St. Cloud, St. Paul, and Waseca.
